Today, Film and Video Umbrella and Jerwood Charitable Foundation announce moving-image artists Lucy Clout and Marianna Simnett as the winners of the second edition of the Jerwood/Film and Video Umbrella Awards. Both have been selected to receive commissions of £20,000, to allow them to work on major new moving-image projects. These new works will premiere at Jerwood Space, London and CCA: Centre for Contemporary Arts, Glasgow in 2015.

The winners were selected from a shortlist of four female artists, all of whom were awarded bursaries of £4,000 in 2013 to allow them to develop pilot projects that respond to the curatorial brief and title ‘What Will They See of Me?’. These works by Lucy Clout, Kate Cooper, Anne Haaning and Marianna Simnett are currently on show at Jerwood Space, London, until 27 April, and CCA: Centre for Contemporary Arts, Glasgow, as part of Glasgow International, until 21 April 2014.

On awarding these two new commissions, the selection panel commented:

“All four artists have raised the bar to remarkable heights with the rigour and ambition of their development works. Their distinctive voices and subject matter have resulted in an exhibition which is deep and rich in relation to the theme. For the singularity and pertinence of their proposals, we commended Lucy Clout and Marianna Simnett for the Awards. Their brave, confident grasp of the layers and complexities of their ideas was invigorating. We know we will see much more of Lucy and Marianna, as we will of Anne and Kate.”

To date, the Awards have endowed funds of £112,000 to support eight of the most exciting new talents to emerge on the contemporary art scene: Ed Atkins, Lucy Clout, Kate Cooper, Anne Haaning, Emma Hart, Naheed Raza, Corin Sworn and Marianna Simnett. Previous winners of the 2012 edition of the Awards: Tomorrow Never Knows, Ed Atkins and Naheed Raza, have gone on to exhibit in solo and group shows and screenings at MoMA PS1, New York; Kunsthalle, Zurich; the Institute of Contemporary Arts, London and Arnolfini, Bristol.

- Lucy Clout

In her new commission, Lucy Clout will continue her focus on the background noise of everyday life, moving beyond the background voices of the TV extras who were the subject of her first-stage project, The Extra’s Ever-Moving Lips, to the thoughts that lurk at the back of people’s minds. Casting her eye over an online world where private lives (and private parts) are increasingly on public display, she will look at acts of self-exposure, such the case of US politician Anthony Weiner, not for what they reveal in a shocking or scandalised way but for what they lay bare about the mundane complications that occur when words refuse to disappear.

- Marianna Simnett

In Marianna Simnett's The Udder, the purity of milk and the struggle to keep it free from outside contamination are symbols of other forms of pristine innocence, and the wider threat of corruption. Further developing the central themes of her original work, Simnett will broaden her focus from the farmyard to more far-flung, mythological horizons – from the 'sworn virgins' of the mountains of Albania (and their esoteric oaths of chastity), to the figures of medieval saints as embodiments of female virtue.

The selection panel for What Will They See of Me? comprised five experts in the field of moving-image: Ed Atkins, artist; Steven Bode, Director of Film and Video Umbrella; Shonagh Manson, Director of Jerwood Charitable Foundation; Francis McKee, Director of CCA: Centre for Contemporary Arts, Glasgow; and Catherine Wood, Curator of Contemporary Art & Performance at Tate Modern.

The University of East London, School of Arts and Digital Industries, is generously supporting the Awards by providing the four artists with access to their wide range of facilities.

The shortlisted works for the Jerwood/Film and Video Umbrella Awards: What Will They See of Me? will be at Jerwood Space, London until 27 April 2014 and at CCA: Centre for Contemporary Arts, Glasgow - as part of Glasgow International, until 21 April 2014.
