Untitled (Edible Clock)

14 January - 4 May 2013

JVA Project Space

Café 171, Jerwood Space, London, SE1 0LN

Untitled (Edible Clock) is a new sculptural work by Sara Nunes Fernandes which has been specifically produced for the JVA Project Space, the cafe adjoining the gallery in Jerwood Space. The sculpture comprises a quartz clock mechanism and elements made from dough which have been cooked and toughened in an oven. Together these elements form a functional clock which has been positioned at the apex of the Project Space's main wall. These hand-made, food-based elements are combined with the mechanical rhythm of a clock, gently ticking every second, marking time passing. However, in doing so, it also highlights its own self-awareness as a sculpture, which is on display for a duration each day over a period of months. This work clearly makes a playful reference to food and baking. It also makes a cinematic reference to the Hill Valley Courthouse clock tower in the film Back to the Future.

Untitled (Edible Clock) aims to draw attention to the way in which visitors commonly inhabit the JVA Project Space; as a place to spend or pass time. Its placement also alerts our attention to the dual status of the Project Space – as both a café, in which timed activities take place and an exhibition space, in which newly produced artworks are shown.

Sara Nunes Fernandes creates sculptural works which playfully move between being complicit with their context and its critique. They are, on the one hand, ironic and, on the other, sincere. Nunes Fernandes has also presented a number of performances including: The sideways boy and the levitating granny, The frontal man and the backside woman, The upside-down man and his wife who had her feet on the ground. She is also involved with various music projects, both solo and in collaboration with Jack Barraclough and Rachel Marie Horwood.
